

Constrictive Grud-icism

I can't believe we keep coming to Puzzled Pint. These puzzles tonight were just like the paper they were printed on.

Oh? how's that?

TEARABLE !!!!

According to Waldorf and Statler, this set of puzzles was a real rain trek. At least that's what they said, though probably not what they meant. Sometimes they have trouble with their bright rains. They got similarly confused in all the rest of their critiques.

I've got something for those clog dancers: a bottle of Drano! Tango with one of them and I bet you end up with a sore TOE, BY golly!

Hoo boy, just watching the Swedish Chef gave me indigestion! I'd rather be FED ROCKS

It's a good thing those classical composers are already dead, or Rowlf's playing would have killed them. His musical group is just a HACK BAND

That Gonzo is a menace. Not to mention his flocking chickens! They eat your tomatoes before they're RIPE, OR DASH across the road for no reason. Just a bunch of dumb clucks.

The frog's lecture was so pedestrian. He's hopeless. Such a DARN BORE that I'm even tired of yawning.

Pigs in Space? More like Cosmic Boars. Maybe future space colonies will BAN FELT so that making puppets would be illegal.

The last puzzle really made me see the LIGHT, WHY? Because it meant the whole thing was over and we could go home.

My favorite was the bonus puzzle. It was better than having the Easter BUNNY PHONE me up and give me piles of candy.

- WHITE LIE An innocuous fib.
- FUNNY BONE A humorous humerus.
- DIAPER RASH Red spots on a baby's bottom.
- BOW TIE Man's neckwear worn with a tux.
- RED FOX A russet forest mammal with a bushy tail.
- BACK HAND A tennis stroke made from the non-dominant side.
- BARN DOOR It's no use shutting this after the horse has escaped.
- FAN BELT If this strap snaps in your engine, the radiator won't cool down anymore.
